Ipswich Schools have community open day

Education Minister Geoff Wilson and Ipswich MP Rachel Nolan attend community open day at Ipswich schools.

The Bligh Government, in partnership with the Australian Government, has built the world class Amberley District State School at Yamanto. On Saturday this school opened its doors to the local community for tours of the new school, and a free BBQ. Hundreds of locals came to look over the school and the state of the art facilities that have been incorporated into its modern sustainable design.

Ms Nolan said "Larger classrooms and quality IT facilities throughout create a better learning environment for our local children and teachers".

Members of the Silkstone and Booval communities also had an opportunity to visit the newly refurbished Silkstone State School, which has benefited from the Bligh Government's State Schools of Tomorrow program.

"This refurbishment has incorporated many new facilities including two new major classroom blocks, new amenities and a massively expanded school library," Ms Nolan said.

Better facilities create better learning for our local children and Silkstone State School is a fine example of the success of the State Schools of Tomorrow program. The LNP committed to axing this program at the last State election," she said.
